A bicyclist has rights which every one else is bound to respect. He is entitled to half of the street when he meets any other vehicle, from a cart to a threshing machine. He can make a heavily loaded wagon give him half of the roadway, and he is not responsible if the sight of his wheel causes a team to run away and kill several people. As long as he has these privileges he is not also entitled to the privileges of the sidewalk. He cannot own the whole right of way from fence to fence. from Washington says:

their wheels into the business part of the city every day, but there are hundered of wheelmen who do not go off the pavement on an average of once a week. When that one time came, instead of getting a license to ride the walk the wheelman would say to himself: "I'll ride just this once without a license," and no one would ever stop him to ask if he had a license or had a tag.

Another provision by which the wheelmen claim they will insure safety to pedestrians is that wheelmen shall be compelled to dismount when they go to pass a pedestrian on the walk. If this part of the proposed ordinance be always conscientiously complied with it would mitigate the objections. The provision is a good one in theory, but would it work well in fact? The practice would especially endanger children and old people who might be on the statement of the administration that there was reason to hope a final factors of the boundary controverses might grow out of this relation between the pending questions."

The police started in pursuit of "Spider" and after several hours of hunting they decided he was well named. Small and thin, 13 years old and small enough to hide in a wash tub it was a hard matter for the police to find him. They did not, but Sunday morning the culprit was marched into the police station by a man who met him out near "Racket Hill" and who knew he was wanted for the crime.

Of course it is exasperating to have to walk one's wheel past mud holes where the streets are not paved, but every class has to put up with some unpleasant things.

The swimmers were enjoying themselves but one by one they wanted to go out on the bank and there were the officers with their clothes. They propose to hedge their ordinance around with such restrictions that would make it theoretically perfectly safe and protect pedestrians from being run down, but there is probably scarcely a wheelman in Topeka, who would take advantage of the provisions of the ordinance at all, who would not break over one or more of the restrictions inside of the first month.

The proposed ordinance would require, first, that all wheelmen who desire to ride on the walks shall procure a license from the chief of police. This provision would probably be obeyed by the majority of these wheelmen who live in the suburbs and desire to ride their wheels into the business part of the city every day, but there are hundreds of wheelmen who do not go of Several bystanders say that Laird approached Robinson from behind and struck him a blow on the side of his head with a pair of brass knuckles. Robinson had no chance to defend himself and when he was assisted to his feet Laird had fled to an upstairs room near by where Officer McElroy arrested him.

Laird and Robinson had some troble a couple of weeks ago. Laird's friends were busy raising a bond of $50 to get him out of fail. Three years ago Laird was adjudged insane and sent to the asylum to be treated for the cocaine habit. He was discharged after several months treatment as cured. His friends now say that Laird has reformed and touches neither cocaine nor liquor.

BAR ROOM FIGHT.

They Have Now Become Common In Topeka.

Sam Klein, the bar tender of the oint in the third floor of Crawford's

Joint in the third floor of Crawford's Opera House, was arrested Saturday afternoon on two charges.

At 5:55 he was arrested by Officer McElroy for fighting with "Chuck" Ogee. The crowd in the joint had been quarreling all the afternoon and the disturbance terminated when Ogee and Klein had some difficulty. Klein reached behind the bar for the butt end of a billiard cue. He went after Ogee and struck him on the side of his head, knocking him down. Ogee's face and eye were hadly injured and he may be partially blind from the effects of the blow. Klein was taken to the fall where the charge of disturbing the peace was placed against him and he put up a nominal bond of $10.

As soon as Chief Ramsey heard of the fight he sent Sergeant Betts and Officers Lucas and McElroy to the joint to arrest Klein for selling liquor. Saturday night and Sunday Klein was anxious to put up $100 for his appearance but Judge Guy refused to take anything but $1,000 bond which Klein furnished this morning.
